SIFF is a festival that aims to amplify the voices of underrepresented communities through the power of film. The festival showcases a diverse array of films addressing critical social issues such as racial identity, mental health awareness, environmental rights, LGBTQ+ identity, gender equality, and more. Each film featured in the festival is carefully curated to provoke thought, inspire action, and spark meaningful conversations.

There will be Q&A discussions with filmmakers, providing audiences with the opportunity to interact directly with the creators and facilitate further discussion about social issues. In addition to the screenings at WBUR, SIFF will also present a selection of films on the E2AC streaming site, ensuring that audiences across the nation have access to these impactful stories.
