Among the highlights of this year's tour is the unveiling of a private residence owned by a local family, graciously opening their doors to the public for a day. Situated in the heart of the East Bay, this captivating property underwent a transformative renovation under the guidance of esteemed architect Stacy Eisenmann.

It's a chance for the public to see firsthand how thoughtful design can enhance everyday living.”

Eddie, Homeowner

"We are pleased to welcome visitors into our home and share the story of its creation," remarks Eddie, one of the homeowners. "It's an opportunity to witness firsthand how thoughtful design can enrich everyday life."

Originally a California bungalow, the residence underwent a comprehensive redesign to suit the needs of a growing family. The new design emphasizes space utilization and natural illumination, and the home now features an open-plan layout that seamlessly integrates indoor and outdoor spaces.

"The design process was a collaborative endeavor between the homeowners and our team," explains Eisenmann. "Together, we aimed to create a practical and visually pleasing environment that reflects the family's unique lifestyle."

Attendees of the AIA East Bay Home Tours will enjoy exclusive access to explore every facet of this meticulously crafted home, from the expansive family quarters on the upper level to the welcoming communal areas on the main floor. Throughout the day, the architect and homeowners will be available to provide insights into the design process and share anecdotes about the home's distinctive elements.
