“The RWJF fellowship takes you from being a really good checker player to being able to play four-dimensional chess.”

Dr. Hassan A. Tetteh: #Surgeon, #Navy veteran, #RWJFHealthPolicyFellow and health policy advocate

“I have made life-long friends through the RWJF Health Policy Fellowship, and the experience of working in Washington, D.C. and influencing health policy at the Federal level fundamentally impacted my career in many positive ways,” Dr. Hassan A. Tetteh said.

In the article, Coulton narrates his journey to the fellowship was far from ordinary. He applied to join the RWJF Health Policy Fellows 2010-2011 cohort and was accepted. But he was deployed to Afghanistan and reapplied for the 2012-2013 cohort. Accepted again, Tetteh welcomed the change of pace from being on the front lines

The piece explores Tetteh's time as a fellow and the relationships he still has with his colleagues (cohort). He feels these connections are just as valuable as the principles and complexities of policymaking he learned during his fellowship.

Coulton also featured elements about Tetteh's life after the fellowship including his ascend within the Military; particularly military medicine. She shared Tetteh's dream of becoming the Secretary of Health and Human Services, the head of the United States Department of Health and Human Services and principal advisor to the president of the United States on all health matters.

"Dr. Hassan Tetteh's story exemplifies the transformative power of leadership and innovation in health policy. We are proud that Dr. Tetteh is an RWJF Health Policy Fellow alumni, and know that his contributions will continue to drive change on many different levels," Dr. Gregg Margolis, Director, RWJF Health Policy Fellows Program said.
