Food Allergy Overview

A food allergy occurs when the immune system mistakenly identifies a specific food as harmful and reacts against it. Food Allergy Symptoms can range from mild, such as hives or itching, to severe, including anaphylaxis, a life-threatening reaction. Common food allergens include peanuts, tree nuts, eggs, milk, wheat, soy, fish, and shellfish. Allergic reactions can occur within minutes to hours after consuming the allergenic food, and even small amounts can trigger a response in sensitive individuals. Food Allergy Diagnosis involves a combination of medical history, physical examination, skin prick tests, and blood tests. Food Allergy Treatment primarily involves strict avoidance of the allergenic food, along with the availability of emergency medications like epinephrine auto-injectors for severe reactions. It's essential for individuals with food allergies to read ingredient labels carefully, communicate their dietary needs to others, and be prepared to manage accidental exposures to prevent potentially life-threatening reactions.
