BRISBANE, QUEENSLAND, AUSTRALIA, April 20, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- Due to various reasons, cars remain settled in people's backyards. It could be due to the car being damaged, stolen or left by previous owners. There are different stories behind them, but Australia is set to roll out a new policy that is related to scrap car removal programs.

People complained about junk cars being piling up in their neighbourhood. It reduces their aesthetics, and it is not visually appealing to see junk cars around the house. Thus, they asked the authorities to do something about it and clear the area. Besides this, junk cars will also reduce the hygiene in the area. Thus, authorities have contacted top cash for cars Queensland and assured the public that they would take action in this matter.

The authorities have come up with a new policy for junk car removal programs. Some important things to remember for this program are:

The authorities will provide monetary incentives to vehicle hauliers to remove junk cars. They can get paid up to $200 dollars per hauler. It is applicable for passenger vehicles and pick-up trucks, which should not weigh more than 15,000 lbs. In this program, no more than three vehicles can be removed per parcel.

Another point includes that the vehicle needs to be free of garbage and debris. The owners must contact registered and approved contractors for junk car removal and submit an application for the same. In addition, the authority has clearly stated that any extra charges above $200 dollars will not be paid by them. The residents need to pay any extra charges incurred, and that charged by the contractor depending on the resident area and location.

The authorities have also suggested the public that junk cars should not be kept and that they should be sold on time. A spokesperson addressed the public, saying, "Sell your car for cash to a car removal company and mitigate the problem of it being piling up in the surroundings". Australian authorities said the policy would be effective soon.
