Definition: Natural disaster insurance, also known as catastrophe insurance, is a type of insurance coverage that provides financial protection to individuals, businesses, and communities in the event of losses resulting from natural disasters. These disasters may include but are not limited to earthquakes, floods, hurricanes, tornadoes, wildfires, and other catastrophic events caused by natural forces.

Market Trends:

The global increase in the frequency and severity of natural disasters, including hurricanes, wildfires, and floods, has driven a greater awareness of the need for natural disaster insurance.

Market Drivers:

The increase in population density and property values in areas prone to natural disasters is driving the demand for insurance.

Market Opportunities:

There is an opportunity for the expansion of parametric insurance solutions. These policies, which pay out based on predefined parameters such as the intensity of a natural disaster, offer faster and more transparent claims processes.
