“MSIFN is excited to support Indigenous energy businesses that bring opportunities to many First Nations and help energize the province’s 'Powering Ontario’s Growth' plan,” said Chief Kelly LaRocca of MSIFN. “Ontario expects electricity generating capacity to double in the next 30 years. The province acknowledges that this growth can only be successful with the participation and leadership from Indigenous communities and partners.”

“We are excited to partner with Voyageur Services on this important initiative to further develop clean energy and nuclear projects,” said Don Richardson, CEO of Minogi. “By combining our strengths and capabilities, we can accelerate the adoption of sustainable energy solutions, and add value to our First Nation shareholders."

Voyageur Services, with its growing experience in nuclear and energy construction solutions, is equally enthusiastic about the collaboration. "This partnership with Minogi aligns with our commitment to advancing clean energy technologies and promoting environmental stewardship," stated Clint Keeler, President of Voyageur Services. "Together, we can forge new pathways for innovation and create a more sustainable future for generations."

Minogi and Voyageur Services will explore joint initiatives, business development, and knowledge-sharing in the clean energy and nuclear sectors. The companies will seek to collaborate with other Mississauga Nations and Williams Treaties First Nations on major projects. The collaboration is expected to contribute to the growth and advancement of First Nation investments and services for the clean energy industry in Ontario as a whole. The parties signed the MOU at the 7th Annual First Nations Major Projects Coalition Conference - "Our Collective Advantage: Indigenous Consent", April 22-23, 2024 at the Sheraton Centre in Toronto.
