About the Author

Lucy Angela Florrie's journey through life has been as vibrant and eclectic as the characters she brings to life in her writing. Born into a theatrical family in Liverpool, England, Lucy's fascination with the stage was practically ingrained in her DNA. Her early years were marked by a flair for storytelling and performance, as she regaled strangers with tales that belied her age and charmed her way into unexpected rewards. From those early encounters on a tram, it was evident that Lucy possessed a natural talent for captivating audiences.

As she grew older, Lucy's creative spirit led her down various paths, from forming a band and touring Liverpool's club scene to exploring the world of go-go dancing. Despite the solitary confines of a cage, Lucy's energy and passion for performance shone through, eventually earning her a place in Liverpool's pioneering go-go dance troupe. Tragedy struck when Lucy lost both of her parents within seven months of each other, prompting her to seek solace and new beginnings in Australia alongside her sisters. There, she continued to pursue her passion for acting, gracing the stage with her presence in amateur plays, musicals, and securing bit parts in film and television. But Lucy's creativity knows no bounds. Alongside her acting endeavors, she has also found joy in crafting poems and limericks, channeling her wit and charm into verse.

It was a transformative trip to Europe with two close friends that served as the inspiration for Lucy's book, "Europe on a G-String." This journey of self-discovery, laughter, and adventure ignited her passion for storytelling, setting her on a path to share her experiences with the world.

For L.A. Florrie, the inspiration to pen her book emerged from the very essence of travel itself. Lucy's journey through Europe wasn't just about exploring new destinations—it was a profound education that begged to be documented. "Travelling is an education that should be documented," Lucy asserts. Whether it's capturing the beauty of a picturesque landscape in poetry or recounting the myriad experiences encountered along the way, Lucy believes that every moment of travel is worthy of preservation. From chance encounters with intriguing individuals to navigating the highs and lows of unfamiliar territories, Lucy's travels provided a wealth of material waiting to be immortalized in writing.

The decision to embark on this literary endeavor was further catalyzed by an unexpected encounter with a magazine horoscope. "Strangely enough too, picking up a random magazine one day and reading my stars which said, 'If you're thinking of writing that book, now is the time' was also a spooky, tap on the shoulder moment," Lucy recalls. This serendipitous message served as a powerful nudge, compelling her to heed the call of creativity and set her fingers to work on the keyboard.

pages. At the end of my book, I want my readers to feel warm and fuzzy – even perhaps feeling inspired to write a book themselves. And I would love it if my book inspired readers to book that trip of a lifetime they've always talked about.

I read a great quote once that said, 'The distance between your dreams and reality is action.'"
