The demand for adaptive clothing is increasing owing to rising number of people with disabilities in Canada. According to the report of Canadian Survey on Disability published in 2017, around 6.2 million people aged 15 years and over reported having a disability in Canada, representing around 22% of the population. Among them, 4.4 million people had difficulties performing daily living activities like dressing. Moreover, growing awareness about availability of adaptive clothing and government initiatives to promote inclusive clothing are also fueling the market growth. For instance, in 2021, the government of Canada launched an initiative called 'fashionABLE' to support Canadian fashion designers in producing adaptive and accessible clothing.

Market Drivers:

Increasing Number of Aging Population and Prevalence of Disabilities is Fueling the Demand for Adaptive Clothing

With rising life expectancy and improved healthcare facilities, the aging population in Canada is growing at an impressive rate. According to Statistics Canada, it is estimated that by 2031, there will be 9.6 million seniors aged 65 and older in Canada, representing almost 25% of the total population. The aging population is more prone to age-related disabilities and chronic health conditions that limit their mobility and flexibility. This has significantly increased the demand for adaptive clothing that provides flexibility, comfort, and independence to this demographic. Moreover, the prevalence of disabilities is also on the rise in Canada. As per the report from Council of Canadians with Disabilities, approximately 1 in 7 Canadians have some form of disability. Adaptive clothing is designed to provide enhanced mobility, comfort, and accessibility to those living with disabilities. Hence, the growing number of older adults and people with disabilities acts as a key growth driver for the Canada adaptive clothing market.

Rising Awareness about Benefits of Adaptive Clothing is Fueling its Adoption across Different Age Groups

Earlier, adaptive clothing was primarily associated with elderly care. However, with rising awareness, people across different age groups now understand the comfort, convenience, and independence provided by adaptive clothing. Younger customers are increasingly adopting adaptive clothing for reasons like post-surgery recovery, limited joint mobility, sports injuries, pregnancy, and more. Even individuals without any disabilities are choosing adaptive clothing for its ergonomic designs, breathability, and enhanced functionality. Manufacturers are promoting the multi-functional qualities of adaptive clothing through various marketing campaigns. Retailers and e-commerce platforms are also playing a pivotal role in educating customers about the personalized fitting, versatility, and dignity offered by these clothing solutions. Higher visibility and understanding of benefits have encouraged customers without disabilities to blend adaptive apparel into their regular wardrobe. This awareness expansion beyond the special needs segment is acting as a key growth driver.
