The New Zealand power tool market is witnessing high growth owing to increasing investment in infrastructure projects across the country. The New Zealand government has earmarked around NZD 12 billion until 2024 for infrastructure development such as road, rail and airport projects which is boosting the demand for power tools in construction activities. Additionally, growing renovation and remodeling activities in residential sector is also driving the sales of power tools such as drills, saws in New Zealand. It is estimated that around 25% of households undertake renovation projects annually which is further propelling the market growth.

Market Driver:

Increase in remodeling and refurbishment activities boosts the demand for power tools

The power tool market in New Zealand is being positively influenced by the increasing remodeling and refurbishment activities across both commercial and residential spaces. With improving economic conditions and rising disposable incomes, homeowners as well as commercial building owners are actively investing in upgrading their existing infrastructure through activities like repairs, renovation and minor construction works. This is propelling the demand for various types of power tools that are essential for tasks like drilling, sawing, sanding etc. Additionally, the government is also undertaking several infrastructure development projects which involve construction as well as repair activities, thus driving the procurement of power tools by contractors.

Strong growth of DIY trend expands the consumer segment of power tool market

In recent times, the popularity of DIY (Do-It-Yourself) trend has increased tremendously among New Zealand consumers. More people are now willing to take up smaller household repair and assembly jobs themselves instead of relying on professionals. This has led to rising sales of basic power tools that are suitable for domestic usage, such as drills, sanders, circular saws etc. Homeowners find DIY activities to be a cost-effective and enjoyable way of handling minor tasks. The availability of step-by-step video tutorials online has also made it easier for novices to learn DIY skills. Considering the growing financial independence and enthusiasm toward self-employment among consumers, the DIY trend is expected to keep boosting the retail power tool market in New Zealand.
