The Fight for Fundamental Rights

The Ziad family has been denied basic rights that many take for granted: security, food, shelter, education, and healthcare. Their daily existence is marked by uncertainty and danger. Yet, their resilience fuels their hope for a better future.

Aspirations for Education

Iman Ziad, an eleventh-grade student, dreams of continuing her studies alongside her sister, Amal (meaning “hope”). Their shared aspiration is to attend an engineering college abroad. However, the harsh reality of life in Gaza makes this dream nearly impossible. Schools and universities lie in ruins, and the ongoing conflict disrupts any semblance of normalcy.

A Home in Ruins

Once, the Ziad family had a home filled with decades of cherished memories. But everything changed in an instant when their country was attacked. Their home was destroyed, along with all their belongings. Iman's father suffered a severe shoulder injury. Now, he requires ongoing treatment, including an artificial joint and cosmetic surgery.

Urgent Need for Aid

The Ziad family faces dire circumstances. They lack shelter, safety, and access to proper medical care. Their only chance for safety lies in leaving Gaza, but the journey is fraught with challenges. The Egyptian side imposes exorbitant travel taxes, making escape unaffordable for them. They need approximately $60,000 to coordinate their exit from Gaza to Egyptian territories. This amount includes travel costs, accommodation, and passport issuance.

In addition, they must cover the costs of studying abroad for their children and rebuilding their lives from scratch. The loss of their home, jobs, and possessions has left them with nothing but determination to survive.
