"We are committed to advocating for change within society's most marginalized communities through our work in prison reform and reentry programs."

Partnering with Montgomery County's Reentry Initiative, the 365 Foundation works towards legislative changes through the Joint State Government Commission's efforts. Their goal is to implement public education and community service initiatives that address issues such as confinement conditions for incarcerated women and their successful reintegration back into society.

The foundation comprises a diverse group of individuals, including formerly incarcerated men and women, social service providers, academics, attorneys, city/state agency staff members, non-profit organization leaders from faith-based communities, and concerned citizens. Together, they have established three committees: Crossing Fences—Conditions of Confinement &

Reentry, Incarcerated Mothers, and Art Therapy Treatment for Incarcerated Women.

"Our focus is on creating real change within the criminal justice system through advocacy work that addresses issues related to confinement conditions for those behind bars or reintegrating back into society after serving time," said Venezia.

The 365 Foundation remains dedicated to supporting currently or formerly incarcerated women regardless of race, ethnicity, disability status, gender identity, age, immigration status, or sexual orientation. Their commitment extends beyond words as they take action to create a more inclusive society where everyone has access to opportunities for growth and development.

The 365 Foundation is dedicated to improving the criminal justice system as it affects justice-impacted women. The increasing number of incarcerated women highlights the need for community-based alternative programs that address the underlying reasons for their crimes. Our focus is on addressing issues that women face while incarcerated, such as mothers and their children, domestic violence survivors in prison, the medical and mental health of women prisoners, and transitional services and work release programs for female prisons.
