Dutch will join other real estate market experts on a live panel discussion about real estate investment trends, the 2024 outlook, and strategic planning for high-end investors. Dutch has continually been at the forefront of educating many on market trends, including a massive land grab in 2022 that included developmental and farmland investing and a recent market grab in various markets in the country, which allowed Dutch to purchase Wentworth, a golf course recently. Dutch will educate and break down what he sees brewing in the market amid a high-interest rate environment and the upcoming moving season in this election year.

“Some people don’t understand how significant election years are in the real estate world,” says Dutch. “Everything from future destination markets to a sudden shift in buyer and seller trends will emerge over the next twelve months, and we need to be ready.”

In one of the most critical years, Dutch continues to drop insight for investors looking to get ahead of the competition, encouraging access and inclusivity to future investors.
