The COVID-19 pandemic had a significant impact on the global cleanroom disposable gloves market:

- Increased Demand: There was a surge in demand for personal protective equipment (PPE), including cleanroom gloves, leading to supply chain strain and shortages.

- Supply Chain Disruptions: Production and distribution were affected, causing delays and difficulties in procurement across various industries.
- Price Volatility: Prices fluctuated significantly due to the imbalance between demand and supply.
- Quality Concerns: Rapid demand increase led to issues with counterfeit and substandard products.
- Regulatory Changes: Temporary measures were implemented to expedite PPE approval and distribution.
- Shifts in Manufacturing: Some manufacturers pivoted to produce medical-grade gloves.
- Long-term Demand: Heightened awareness of hygiene and contamination control may sustain demand post-pandemic.
- Technological Innovations: Accelerated development in glove materials and production processes.
- Distribution Changes: Altered procurement strategies led to changes in distribution channels and supplier relationships.
- Global Expansion: Manufacturers expanded production capabilities to different regions to mitigate supply chain risks.
