Advancements in Modified Atmosphere Packaging Technology Fueling New Opportunities

The ongoing technological advancements in modified atmosphere packaging (MAP) technology for fruits is a key growth driver for the fruit packaging market. MAP technology involves replacing the air surrounding perishable products like fruits with a mixture of gases like nitrogen, carbon dioxide and oxygen to extend their shelf life. The introduction of advanced MAP solutions like flexible packaging formats, custom-printed bags and boxes are positively impacting the market. For instance, breathable films are gaining traction as they allow gas exchange while preventing contamination and moisture loss. Furthermore, innovations centered around active and intelligent packaging techniques involving anti-fogging, anti-molding and ethylene absorbing properties offer unique value propositions.
