“In our work with startups, we realised that starting a business isn’t just about having a good idea; the tricky part is structuring a functional company around it,” says Toni Grunwald, Managing Partner at Max Ventures. “Many newcomers to the island find the local bureaucracy stressful, so we have put together a team to try to streamline the arrival process, and get them to the startup stage”.

In the popular neighbourhood of El Terreno, the Max Ventures office is conveniently located above a multi-story carpark, second line to Palma’s waterfront. Having established itself as a popular co-working office and startup accelerator, the company is now moving toward helping brand new arrivals on the island to navigate the labyrinth of bureaucracy that may seem daunting to those who do not know where to start. Once the initial hurdles have been overcome, it also offers business and administrative support including monthly and annual accounting, establishing business procedures and tax declaration services.

“Mallorca is a hugely popular place for foreigners to live, but many struggle to settle if they do not speak the local language or know the intricacies of the system,” says Toni. “We can offer support in German, Dutch, Ukrainian, English, Swedish, Spanish, and French.”
