"Predatory companies take advantage of people and have an unfair advantage in the legal system," Nelson said, emphasizing the need for accessible financial education. "Imagine a world where you have the knowledge to fight back. That's what I aim to provide through 'Too Much Debt'."

The website will feature a series of articles and resources where Nelson shares industry secrets and legal loopholes that empower readers to navigate eliminating debt. "When people get into debt, it can be hard to get out of it," Nelson explains. "It's something I know about personally. It's constantly on your mind and the stress wears you out."

Nelson's extensive background includes roles at companies like 118 118 Money and NewDay, giving him a unique insight into the inner workings of the debt management industry. His experience is complemented by his work at MoneyNerd, where he has authored over 1,000 articles and videos covering a wide range of topics on debt solutions, including Debt Management Plans (DMP), Individual Voluntary Arrangements (IVA), Debt Relief Orders (DRO), and bankruptcy.

"The aim of 'Too Much Debt' is to give you the information and resources you need to manage your finances wisely," Nelson says. "Many people don't understand how debt and personal finance work or what it takes to become debt-free. I worked in credit card and loan companies for 10 years, so I know the industry secrets and I want to present this knowledge in a clear and engaging way, so you can take charge of your financial future."
