Market Dynamics

Drivers: Increased need for optimized resource utilization through automated business processes

With the implementation of business process automation, solutions, processes that earlier required human intervention are automated, and workforce can focus on core competencies. This leads to the optimum utilization of resources; optimized resource utilization refers to a set of processes and practices that manage a balance between the available resources and the need of enterprises to achieve desired business goals. Optimization aims at achieving desired results within the allocated timeframe and budget with the minimum consumption of the resources. The need for resource optimization is more when demand tends to exceed the existing resources. BPA solutions help in integrating various systems in organizations and reduce the overhead time by automating various processes. The automation of business processes eliminates manual quality assurance and execution steps, and enhances business resource utilization.

Restraints: Persistent growth in cyber-attacks and security issues

Digital transformation has led to the generation of an ample amount of data in organizations. At present, the globalization of businesses has made business processes and flow of data utmost important in organizations. Companies are concerned about sharing their critical business data, and this concern is significantly rising in the market. Security hazards such as malware, hacker attacks, or data thefts pose major threats to the reliable execution of business processes. Any such attack or malware can have negative effects on the companies' profit, shareholder value, or reputation. According to the Breach Level Index 2018 report, there were 945 reported data breaches and almost 4.5 billion compromised data records worldwide in the first half of 2018. Industries such as social media and healthcare where business process automation has applicability were affected. This data represents the existing barriers to the adoption of business process automation, especially in the industries mentioned above.
