The world is facing interconnected crises, with conflicts, climate change and declining development significantly impacting individual lives, societies and economies around the world. So follows the content of the publication, which features original, expert pieces from thought-leaders in their fields. On conflicts, NATO Secretary-General Jens Stoltenberg explores how the G7 Apulia Summit and the NATO Washington Summit are opportunities to demonstrate our steadfast – and shared – commitment to democracy at a time when we face greater security threats than we have for generations. On partnering with developing, emerging and African countries, Akinwumi A Adesina, president of the African Development Bank Group, advocates for greater support to African countries in the form of global climate finance – and details how this will unlock opportunities across the continent. And on AI safety, Sally Costerton, interim president and chief executive officer of ICANN, considers the challenges that rapid digitalisation and advances in AI are posing to the global economy and society – and explores internet governance in an ever-evolving digital world.

Further original insights come from Rafael Mariano Grossi, director-general of the International Atomic Energy Agency, Cindy H McCain, executive director of the World Food Programme, Tedros Adhanom Ghebreyesus, director-general of the World Health Organization and Catherine De Bolle, executive director of Europol. Plus, lead researchers from the G7 Research Group present compliance data for key subject areas – and highlight where and how the G7 could make improvements on their compliance rates.
