Zaph & Zoe Export Company (www.zzexports.com), an African-agro commodity sourcing, processing and export company serving the spice, beverage, grain, pulse and oil seed industry, has emerged as one of the top exporters of hibiscus flowers out of Nigeria.

Over the years, they have exported over 10,000 metric tons of agro produce to countries such as United States, United Arab Emirates, Greece, Netherlands, Germany, India, Mexico and others.

Over time, they have built an extensive network of rural farmers with a strong relationship that influences the right farm practices, strengthening their roots in the supply chain process. Their vast knowledge in logistics processes has put them at the forefront in the market. Their mission is to see to it that customers get timely deliveries on products by solving the challenges that come with shipping from this side of the world.

Hibiscus Flower In Nigeria

Nigeria grows many sought-after cash crops, but one of the globally demanded agricultural products is the dry hibiscus flower, produced in large quantities in Nigeria. Dried hibiscus flower is used in the production of hibiscus tea. The tea is a caffeine-free herbal tea from a special type of hibiscus called Roselle - the scientific name is Hibiscus sabdariffa. The tea is made out of the dried fruit part of Roselle, called calyx, which is red and tastes like berries. It is also used for the local brew known as Zoborodo (Zobo) and can be processed into hot and cold herbal beverages, jellies, and confectioneries, among others.

Although hibiscus grows all year round in almost every state in Nigeria, its most extensive cultivation occurs in Jigawa, Kano, Katsina, Gombe, Bauchi, and Borno. It only takes three to four months to cultivate, depending on the region. Nigerian hibiscus production exhibits a clear seasonal pattern where the peak season is between November and April, while the off-season is from May to October. It is important to note that prices tend to be higher during off-seasons.

There are five types of hibiscus flowers: Gugungu, Talata Kenya, Pataskum, Bulcara (Red and Black), and Katsina Flower. The US, Mexico, Germany, the Netherlands, and several regions of Europe, Asia, and America are among Nigeria's export destinations for dried hibiscus flowers. This is often exported naturally and processed further for its intended purposes.
