Severe Dry Eye Overview

Severe Dry Eye, also known as severe dry eye disease (DED), is a chronic condition where the eyes do not produce enough tears, or the tears evaporate too quickly, leading to insufficient lubrication and moisture on the eye's surface. This can cause significant discomfort, irritation, and inflammation. Symptoms of severe dry eye include persistent dryness, a gritty or sandy sensation, burning or stinging, redness, sensitivity to light, blurred vision, and a feeling of having something in the eye. In more extreme cases, severe dry eye can result in damage to the corneal surface, impaired vision, and increased risk of eye infections.
