About the Author

Dr. Roopa Venktesh is a dedicated family practitioner with training from the UK, currently serving patients in India. Drawing from her experiences, Dr. Venktesh intricately identifies with the multifaceted journey of Mrs. Sonia Gandhi, resonating with the challenges and triumphs encountered in both their careers. Having faced discrimination herself, Dr. Venktesh brings a unique perspective to her writing. As a mother and a professional who has trained and worked abroad, she understands the pervasive impact of discrimination, particularly against women. Dr. Venktesh emphasizes that discrimination, whether based on gender, nationality, or language, affects individuals worldwide and can contribute to conflicts and wars.

With a heartfelt appeal to humanity, Dr. Venktesh advocates for collective action towards creating a world free from discrimination, hatred, and conflict. Through her work and advocacy, she strives to foster understanding, compassion, and unity across diverse communities.

The inspiration behind this book stems from the life and achievements of the author's mother, who, as a homemaker, was unable to pursue her dreams due to discrimination. Her untimely death from cancer serves as a poignant reminder of the consequences of discrimination, which not only deprived her of opportunities but also impacted her health and well-being. The author's writing seeks to shed light on her story and the struggles faced by countless individuals who are marginalized and overlooked due to prejudice. Through her narrative, she aims to raise awareness about the harmful effects of discrimination and advocate for a more inclusive and equitable society where everyone has the opportunity to thrive.
