Thrombotic Thrombocytopenic Purpura Market Insights

Thrombotic thrombocytopenic purpura (TTP) is a rare blood disorder. There are two main types of TTP, inherited/ congenital (cTTP) and acquired (aTTP). Inherited TTP is passed from parents to children through genes and mainly affects newborns and children, while acquired TTP is the more common type primarily affecting adults. TTP is a fatal disease that can cause lasting damage, such as brain damage or a stroke, if not treated. TTP arises abruptly and can stay for days or weeks but can also last for months. Relapses can occur in up to 60% of people who have acquired TTP.

Thrombotic Thrombocytopenic Purpura Drug Market

Though it is a rare disease but in every decade, the prevalence of Thrombotic Thrombocytopenic Purpura (TTP) has been increasing. Not many therapeutic methods are successful in TTP patients. Plasma therapy is one of the widely used therapeutic methods that is used to treat TTP patients. To give proper cure to the increasing number of patients, more therapeutic agents need to be identified.
