Rising Prevalence of Sleep Disorders Boosts Market Growth
The increasing prevalence of sleep disorders is expected to drive the white noise machine market forward. Sleep disorders are becoming more common due to factors such as obesity, heightened stress levels, and extensive use of electronic devices. White noise machines help individuals with sleep disorders by creating a consistent, soothing sound environment that masks disruptive noises and promotes relaxation. For instance, Sleep Doctor Holdings LLC reported in September 2023 that over 70 million men, over 50 million women, and almost 20 million children snore, with up to 70% of snorers diagnosed with sleep apnea. The global prevalence of obstructive sleep apnea (OSA) affects around one billion adults. This growing issue underscores the importance of white noise machines in managing sleep disorders.
