"I am so honored to receive this award," says Davis. "My passion and research has always been focused on the working mother who faces various challenges because of her socioeconomic status, ethnicity, and femininity. My hope is that no mother feels left behind and is able to confidently navigate her life ."

Besides her work with BRI, Tanya is the Manager of Business Learning & Development at Denver International Airport, where she has been designing and implementing a nationally recognized training academy for historically underutilized businesses. Tanya created a specialized change management model from infancy in thought to being a nationally recognized program. Tanya also worked with and led a team of people in developing training for managers and directors on how to lead their teams through changes.

At BRI, Tanya uplifts and empowers working mothers. She created Single Mom Spotlight, a video series to highlight single working mothers—their struggles and accomplishments. Tanya developed a quarterly leadership series for single moms within the City and County of Denver. Single moms have the opportunity to learn about Authentic Leadership and how to communicate effectively in the workspace with team members.

Tanya was also recognized for her involvement in the community. She used her education and experience to start a ministry at her church, And Still I Rise: The Making of a Butterfly. This ministry focused on supporting women and families impacted by domestic violence. On a biweekly basis, women and family members would come to an undisclosed location to find resources and have a safe place to talk about how to remove themselves from the situation.
