“

To achieve a therapeutic effect, three elements must be present in the salt cave: salt on all four walls, climate control, and a salt generator,”

Margaret Smiechowski

Dr. Smiechowski, who introduced the concept of salt therapy to the United States approximately 20 years ago and built the country's first Himalayan salt cave, continues leading the industry with unparalleled expertise. "To achieve a therapeutic effect, three elements must be present in the salt cave: salt on all four walls, climate control, and a salt generator," explained Dr. Smiechowski.

Ensuring safety and efficacy is paramount in the construction of salt caves. "Salt must be applied with non-toxic materials, and the climate control must be calibrated to maintain client safety. If you leave the cave covered with salt dust, the concentration is too high," Dr. Smiechowski added.

She emphasized the importance of recognizing ineffective salt therapy rooms and salt caves. "The first big giveaway is AC grills in the ceiling of the salt cave. Second, avoid rooms with sticks, fabrics, and pillows, as they can easily break down by salt and become allergens," advised Dr. Smiechowski.

Dr. Smiechowski guides those interested in starting a salt therapy business, urging them to seek support from experienced companies. "It will ensure your success in the salt therapy business. We offer lifetime support to all our clients," she stated. She also warned against building salt rooms on a low budget, noting that a well-constructed salt cave in the same area can quickly push lesser-quality rooms out of business.
