"He always had a sense of humor about him," said Jonathan Baker, Director of FATE. "Donald and I spent six months crafting his performance for this role, unfortunately to fall short at the finish line. Despite this, a great and endearing friendship emerged until the end. I'll see you down the road, pal."

Jonathan Baker's second to last directorial venture, FATE, showcases his exceptional ability to bring together Hollywood legends in a captivating narrative. The film stars the iconic Faye Dunaway, known for her unforgettable performances in classics like "Chinatown" and "Network," alongside Andrew McCarthy, celebrated for his roles in "The Blacklist," "Orange is the New Black," and his latest documentary "Brats." The versatile Harvey Keitel, whose extensive filmography includes "Pulp Fiction" and "The Piano," seamlessly stepped into the role. "FATE" weaves a compelling story that leverages the extraordinary talents of its distinguished cast, highlighting Baker's directorial prowess and his capacity to create profound, character-driven cinema.
