The group says, "Maine is the one of the nation's leading states for people who will develop mesothelioma and while shipyards might be the biggest reason-they are not the only reason. A worker at a power plant, paper mill, a plumber, electrician, mechanic or any other type of skilled trades worker in Maine could have easily brought asbestos home every day on their before the mid-1980s. Secondhand exposure to asbestos includes being around someone who has asbestos on their clothing. The problem is many workers who were exposed to asbestos were not aware before the early 1980s that asbestos exposure was a big issue.
