"The act of delivering these iconic images to the moon is intended to inspire humanity to chose love over hate"

AMSTERDAM , THE NETHERLANDS ,
June 26, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- An image of Amsterdam’s memorial “Stolpersteine,” or “Stumbling Stones” and a digital image of “Moon Landscape” by Holocaust victim Petr Ginz landed on the Moon earlier this year to commemorate victims of the Holocaust.

Lonestar Data organized this humanitarian mission on the Intuitive Machines Odysseus, IM-1 Lunar Lander mission. The small brass plaques that are embedded in the roadway in front of the former homes of Holocaust victims, are known as “Stolpersteine,” which literally means "stumbling stones". To date, more than 106,000 Stolpersteine have been installed throughout Europe, making it the largest decentralized memorial in the world.

Also on this mission to the lunar surface was the image of the drawing “Moon Landscape” by Holocaust victim Petr Ginz. The drawing is said to reflect, with remarkable detail, how the teenage Ginz believed the earth would look from the moon. It illustrated his desire to reach a place from where the earth, which threatened his life, could be seen from a safe distance.

This Friday, June 28th, the 2,500 Stolperstein will be placed in Amsterdam in memory of Klara

Borstel-Engelsman (1842-1944). Government officials, including Mayor Femke Halsema and Dop van Ulzen will join Borstel-Engelsman's family members during this significant tribute.

In 1992 artist Gunter Demnig started the Stolpersteine, brass covered stones sculpture and memorial project, to commemorate the victims of Nazis during the Second World War. The Stolpersteine are placed in the sidewalk in front of the last freely chosen homes of the victims.

To raise awareness of this remarkable project a short form documentary "Tracks: Stumbling Stones Amsterdam" explores the laying of "Stolpersteine" memorial stones installed in front of the homes along the central canals in Amsterdam. These stones serve to provide a small tear of sorrow next to the grand and historic architecture of the canals. We hope this film inspires others to adopt a canal or adopt a street to sponsor the installation of Stolpersteine memorial stones in communities throughout Europe.

About "Moon Landscape"

The image of the drawing by 16-year-old Holocaust victim Petr Ginz "Moon Landscape," reveals a young man who, in addition to his other talents, was both a researcher and a scientist full of hope and optimism that science, not hate, would ultimately trump and begin to heal humanity.

Moon Landscape by Petr Ginz - Teenage Holocaust Victim - Image on the Moon

"Tracks," takes viewers on a journey to uncover the spirit and intention behind the Stolpersteine, small brass memorial stones that commemorate the victims of the Holocaust. The film encourages us to recall the neighbors, friends, grandparents, mothers, fathers, children and babies who were the victims of hate and intolerance. According to the filmmaker Michael Potter, "the film is a visually gorgeous, poetic and uplifting meditation on art, encounter and remembrance." The film explores the impact of the Stolpersteine on communities and families, and how they serve as a powerful reminder.

The multi-award winning documentary "Tracks" features interviews with historians, survivors, and descendants of victims, and those that selflessly carry out the creation and placement of these stones. This powerful documentary is a must-see for anyone looking to deepen their understanding of remembrance and the impact on individuals and communities.
