Memory Parlors create distinctive spaces that interweave fragmented narratives of peace, justice, and individual virtue through history, philosophy, and art. This event will attract historians, philosophers, artists, and anyone deeply interested in the intersections of peace, justice, and memory. According to Randall Olson, a Board Member of the Foundation, "'Conscience in Action' concentrates on stories and ideas of exemplary individuals, providing a framework for exploring the moral dimension of history." In line with this theme, the event will examine influential figures who epitomize "conscience in action," including:

- Dante Alighieri (1265-1321): Celebrated Italian poet.
- John Brown (1800-1859): American abolitionist.
- Constance Lytton (1869-1923): British suffragette and prison reform advocate.
- Violet Oakley (1874-1961): Renowned American artist and peace advocate.
- Ham Sok Hon (1901-1989): Korean Quaker, writer, and peace and democracy activist.

Participants will also explore the role of the "public conscience" in international law, and the diverse "philosophies of conscience" articulated by thinkers such as Immanuel Kant (1724-1804) and Hannah Arendt (1906-1975). A special highlight includes a visit to the Philip Jaisohn Memorial House in Media, PA. Philip Jaisohn (1864-1951) was the first Korean naturalized as a U.S. citizen and a dedicated advocate for Korean independence and international education.

The event is sponsored by the Cora di Brazzà Foundation, a Michigan-based 501(c)(3) organization dedicated to advancing the peace through law movement. Additional support comes from the Castello di Brazzà, The Philip Jaisohn Memorial Foundation, The Peace History Society, and the law offices of Berney and Sang.
