Office of Academic Innovation, Operations, and Technology at the University of Arizona Global Campus \(UAGC\), was appointed as a faculty member for the Online Learning Consortium's Institute for Emerging Leadership in Online Learning (IELOL) program for the 2024 cohort. The program will kick off this July.

His dedication to academic innovation and his extensive experience makes him a perfect fit for this prestigious position.”

IELOL is a prestigious, four-part leadership development program running from mid-July to November annually. Designed for professionals in leadership roles within their institutions, the program enhances leadership skills, fosters international networks, and addresses the dynamic challenges of online and digital education. Participants engage in an Online Immersion Experience, an in-person Residency Experience at the University of North Carolina Charlotte, a three-month Implementation Phase, and culminate in a Leadership Network Symposium at the OLC Accelerate conference. The program aims to develop leaders equipped to navigate and advance the future of digital learning.

Aylward brings over 16 years of extensive experience in higher education operations, spanning various departments such as student services, registrar, and curriculum operations. His current role within Academic Affairs emphasizes his commitment to fostering academic innovation and excellence.

Since 2012, Aylward has also served as an associate faculty member at the Forbes School of Business and Technology® at UAGC, focusing on leadership and management courses. He is a staunch advocate for high-quality education, with comprehensive experience in online, traditional classroom formats, and hybrid classroom settings. His understanding of the unique challenges faced by both students and faculty positions him as an invaluable asset to the IELOL program.

Aylward holds a Doctor of Psychology with a specialization in Business and Organizational Leadership from the University of the Rockies in Denver, CO, and is an alumnus of the IELOL program, having completed it in 2021.

“We are thrilled to see Dr. Aylward take on this new role with the IELOL program,” said Morgan Johnson, vice president of Academic Experience at UAGC. “His dedication to academic innovation and his extensive experience makes him a perfect fit for this prestigious position. We are confident that his contributions will significantly benefit the IELOL program and its participants.”

Bryan Aylward, associate vice president overseeing the Office of Academic Innovation, Operations, and Technology at the University of Arizona Global Campus

The Office of Academic Innovation, Operations, and Technology at UAGC is integral to the university's mission and goals. It encompasses five primary functions: Innovation & Technology, Faculty Scheduling, Contracts & Payroll Compliance, Academic Project Management, and Data and Academic Systems. This office plays a crucial role in supporting faculty and staff to ensure student success in their educational pursuits.
