DETAILS: Hondo's location approximately 40 miles from San Antonio, along with the city's multimodal logistics and lower costs, made it a strategic choice for the company's ongoing expansion and diversification goals. The third Boise Cascade distribution center in the state, the facility will support the company's expansion into high-growth markets while also supporting product diversification in engineered wood products, leading brands such as Trex, James Hardie, Therma-Tru, and Huber, as well as lumber and panel products.

San Antonio-based Metropolitan Contracting Company is the contractor charged with the design and construction of Boise Cascade's new rail-served distribution center. "Boise Cascade and METRO meticulously planned and designed the facility for over a year, and we are excited to break ground. The new distribution center will not only further strengthen Boise Cascade's reach, but it will also create new jobs and spur growth for the City of Hondo. We are glad to be part of this project and look forward to bringing our client's vision to life." said Fernando Diego, Managing Principal.

"We are very excited to expand our footprint in Texas," said Jim Wickham, Senior Vice President of Eastern Operations. "The Hondo branch will help us provide additional service and value for our customers."
