

Center for Plain Language Announces 2024 Board of Directors

RICHMOND, VIRGINIA, US, July 9, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The Center for Plain Language announced today the following new members have been elected to its 2024 board of directors.

The following members will serve a three-year term:

- Beverly Ingle, content strategist/UX designer, REI Systems, Inc.
- Brian Mulawka, director of corporate communications, Teachers' Retirement Fund
- Jess Brovsky-Eaker, director of editorial services, Law Week Colorado
- Katie Leath, director of center for health literacy, University of Arkansas for Medical Science
- Marie Jane Nirdlinger, deputy town manager, Town of Chapel Hill, North Carolina

"The goal of the Center for Plain Language is to champion clear communication," said Executive Director Merel Elsinga. "Each of these new board members has years of communications expertise that complement our existing board to help us further advance our goal and strengthen our ability to advocate for plain language."

Three board members were re-elected to serve another 3-year term:

- Barbra Kingsley, owner of Kingsley-Kleimann Group
- Deborah Bosley, founder and principal at The Plain Language Group, LLC.
- Kathryn Catania, deputy director of safety recommendations and communications at National Transportation Safety Board

Other members of the board are:

- Casey Mank, co-founder, Bold Type
- Ian Lewenstein, owner, Cap Your Pen LLC.
- Julie Clement, principal, J. Clement Communications
