A Dangerous Goods training session is coming! SAS is presenting Vanja Rajic, the instructor that will deliver it

Vanja Rajic has been a Dangerous Goods instructor and consultant for the past 10 years, training approximately 3,000 individuals across Serbia, Montenegro, Slovenia, the Netherlands, Canada, the Middle East, and Tanzania. She collaborates closely with numerous airlines, handling agents, freight forwarders, and shippers and thoroughly enjoys working in multicultural environments. Interview with Vanja Rajic:

When asked what inspired her to start a career in aviation, Vanja replied that she has always been fascinated by airplanes and the sky. Her love for aviation began at an early age, and after working as a flight attendant, she realized her passion for the dynamic aviation industry. Transitioning to an instructor role allowed her to contribute differently while staying connected to aviation.

Regarding her experience delivering aviation courses, she stated that she has been a Dangerous Goods instructor for the past 10 years, training thousands of individuals from various airlines, airports, and freight forwarder companies. Working with people from different parts of the world has been a privilege.

When asked about the most rewarding aspects of her career, Vanja shared, "Being an aviation trainer is both personally and professionally rewarding. Seeing the positive results of sharing Dangerous Goods knowledge and continuously learning to stay updated with industry news to create an interactive learning environment is incredibly fulfilling."

In discussing what delegates can expect from the upcoming Dangerous Goods training session, Vanja explained, "The Dangerous Goods training is known to be challenging. Delegates will become well-versed with the IATA Dangerous Goods Regulation manual and will engage in practical exercises to apply their knowledge immediately. The focus will be on practical application rather than rote learning. For the train-the-trainer course, delegates will learn how to prepare training material, deliver effective training, and assess participants' knowledge, with a lot of group discussions and interactive sessions."

Finally, on the topic of what motivates her as an aviation instructor, Vanja mentioned, "Supporting course participants through challenges and watching them develop their skills is incredibly satisfying. Hearing about their successes in applying what they've learned, such as preventing potential incidents, motivates me to continue teaching."
