anticipated "Cloud Security Thirsty Thursdays" at the renowned HackerDojo in Mountain View, CA. The event attracted a diverse group of industry professionals and enthusiasts, all eager to partake in an evening of enlightening presentations and networking. The highlights of the evening were keynote speeches by Prashant Venkatesh, Manager of Product Security at Poshmark and Girish Bhat, CMO/VP of Marketing at a leading data and security startup, which offered valuable insights and practical guidance.

Prashant delivered a compelling presentation on "What PCI 4.0 Means for Product Security Teams," exploring the new PCI standards and their implications for product security teams. Following this, Girish provided an in-depth analysis of "GenAI for Cybersecurity: Current Status," examining the current state and future potential of generative AI in cybersecurity.

The event was marked by dynamic discussions, insightful contributions, and a strong sense of community among attendees. CloudDefense.AI extends heartfelt thanks to all participants for their active engagement, which played a crucial role in the event's resounding success. They were thrilled to welcome top security experts from leading companies such as Poshmark, Checkmarx, WIZ, Visa, IBM, Google, Amazon, and many others..

CloudDefense.AI remains committed to promoting collaboration and continuous learning within the cybersecurity community. The company looks forward to organizing more impactful events and initiatives in the near future and encourages stakeholders to stay tuned for upcoming updates and announcements.
