tabiLabs Inc. Introduces “tabifolk,” New App for Global Accessible Travel

“For those of us with disabilities or special travel needs, finding the right information can be a huge barrier to planning the perfect holiday. Information on accessible travel is often one-directional and scattered across countless websites, making it difficult and often frustrating to find,” says Josh Grisdale, CEO and representative director of tabiLabs Inc. “We created tabifolk to fill in the gaps in accessible travel information through personal experiences while also making new connections worldwide.”

The app serves as an online community where users can share and find specific information related to accessible travel in their travel destination. Users can join groups specific to their destination or topic of interest, such as “flying with a disability,” “accessible cruises,” “travel with a special needs child” and more and ask questions that can help them prepare for their trip or assist them while on the trip.

The app further enables users to:

- Share accessible travel news stories and information

- Ask questions about their trip and get answers from local experts and fellow travelers with disabilities
- Connect with others
- Become a local concierge and welcome people to their country
- Get help and advice when traveling
