"Everyone should be using a VPN," says Geoffrey Walters, a tech expert and writer for Addictive Tips. "It's not something that only big companies and governments need to be thinking about. Your personal information and what you do online is open to exploitation if you're not using one," he adds.

But VPNs come at a cost: They can rapidly slow down connection speed, making it almost unusable.

The team at Addictive Tips decided to test various VPNs out there to find the fastest VPN, and they have recently released a report highlighting the Top 5 Fastest VPNs of 2024.

A slow internet connection is very disruptive. Gaming and Video Streaming Sites require a high-speed connection with low latency to provide the highest quality experience. Users are often forced to choose between a fast connection, or a secure connection.

Some older VPNs have also given the industry a bad name. While providing ample encryption and a high level of security, speed could easily be reduced by a factor of 18. That makes a standard home connection worthless, which has led to a lot of people simply ditching a VPN and using the internet without any security.

"We want to reverse that trend and bust the myth that using a VPN is slow and disruptive. Our research has shown that there are some great VPNs out there that are not only very secure, but doesn't degrade user experience," adds Walters.

Walters invites readers to pop on over to their site and try out some of the suggested VPNs. They've also negotiated sign-on bonuses and deals for first time users, making it a perfect time to test some out.
