When you see something that is not right, not fair, not just, you have to speak up. You have to say something; you have to do something.”

John Lewis

“Domestic Violence is still a social stigma, we're ashamed to talk about it, and the statistics keep rising. It's important we start vocalizing the impact and confronting it,” said A.

Garcia. “You cannot conquer what you do not confront.”

Partnerships are crucial in this area because it combines resources, expertise, and networks from various organizations, amplifying the impact of collective efforts to address and prevent domestic violence. Collaborative initiatives ensure a more comprehensive approach, enhancing support for survivors and their family, ending the cycle of return, healing, regaining self-esteem, confidence, clarity, act as referrals conduit to other agencies, fostering a stronger, more united front against domestic violence.

“This event is happening right on time, showing how recent changes are creating gaps and how they can be bridged,” said the Co-Chair. “Seeing various forces coming together truly makes a difference.”
