We are seeing an increase in reported termite damage in cities such as Virginia Beach, Chesapeake and Newport News. A simple termite inspection can help reduce the risk of a major termite issue.”

George Pilkington

Termites, often referred to as the "silent destroyers," cause extensive damage to wooden structures, often going unnoticed until significant harm has been done. With over 600,000 homes in the U.S. affected by termite infestations each year, the economic impact is substantial. Homeowners typically spend an average of $3,000 on repairs and treatments following a termite infestation.

Key Findings from the Report:

- National Cost Impact: Termite damage and control costs exceed $5 billion annually.
- Homeowner Expenses: The average cost per affected homeowner is approximately $3,000.
- Regional Variations: States in the Southeast and Southwest regions experience the highest rates of termite activity, accounting for nearly 60% of the total damage costs.
- Preventative Measures: Homes with proactive termite inspection and treatment plans show significantly lower damage costs, highlighting the importance of regular maintenance.

"We are seeing a worrying trend in the increasing costs associated with termite damage," said George Pilkington, CEO of Universal Pest & Termite. "Homeowners need to be aware of the risks and take proactive measures to protect their properties. Our goal is to provide the best possible solutions to prevent and treat termite infestations, ultimately saving our customers money and preserving the integrity of their homes."
