Growth Driver Of The Wound Care Centers Market

The rising incidence of chronic wounds is expected to propel the growth of the wound care center market going forward. Chronic wounds are those that do not heal within the predicted timeframe, which is usually three months, despite receiving appropriate care. Chronic wound incidences are rising due to the increasing prevalence of diabetes and obesity, which impair healing processes and contribute to complications. Chronic wounds require advanced treatments typically available in specialized wound care centers, which also provide psychosocial support to help patients cope with the emotional and psychological aspects of their condition.
