Definition:
The managed network services market encompasses the provision of comprehensive network management solutions by third-party service providers. These services include the monitoring, maintenance, and optimization of an organization's network infrastructure to ensure reliable, secure, and efficient network operations. Managed network services are critical for businesses that require robust network performance without dedicating extensive in-house resources to IT management.

Market Drivers:
• Businesses outsource network management to focus on core competencies.
• Increased cybersecurity threats drive demand for managed network services (MNS) with advanced security features.

Market Opportunities:
• Growing adoption of hybrid IT environments creates demand for integrated network solutions.
• Expansion of IoT devices requires specialized network management for monitoring, security, and scalability.
