

First National Uniform Day to Honor Uniformed Professionals, Celebrate the Inaugural Event on September 18, 2024

Honoring the Dedication and Service of Uniformed Professionals Across All Industries

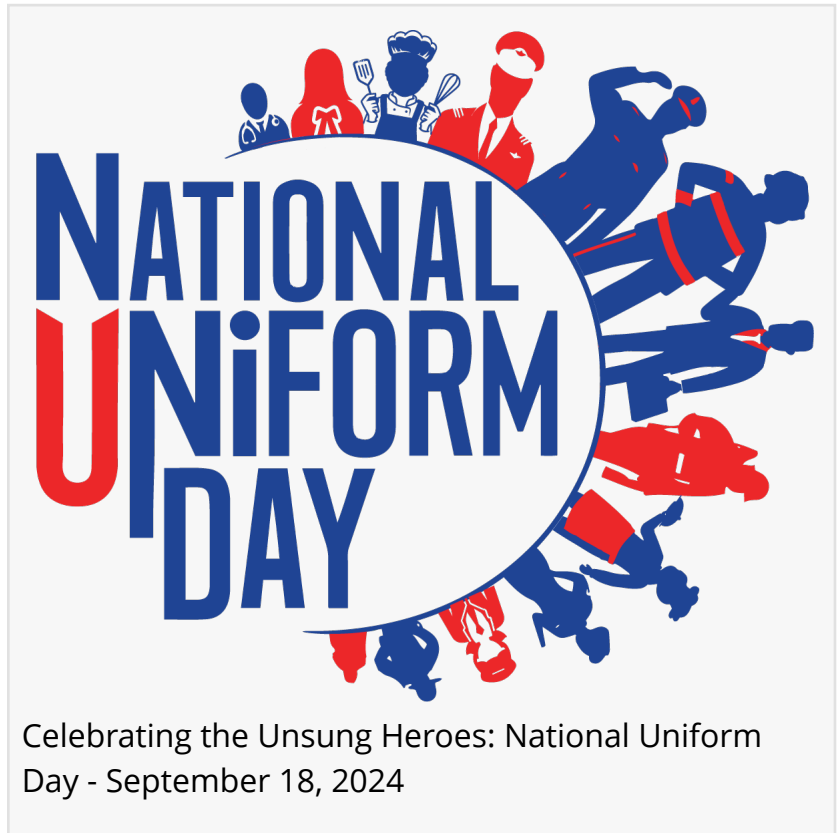

EVANSTON, IL, USA, August 6, 2024 /EINPresswire.com/ -- The Network Association of Uniform Manufacturers and Distributors (NAUMD) proudly announces National Uniform Day on Wednesday, September 18, 2024. This significant day is dedicated to honoring the dedication and service of the tens of millions of professionals who wear uniforms as a crucial part of their daily work.

Initiated with the goal of providing this recognition annually on the third Wednesday of September, National Uniform Day celebrates the unwavering commitment of those who don uniforms in their professions—from first responders and healthcare workers to service industry employees and construction workers.

“Uniforms are more than just the fabric they are made of; they are a symbol of the service and dedication that wearers bring to their roles every day,” said Rick Levine, executive director of the NAUMD. “This day is about celebrating the pride and spirit of the diverse professionals who contribute so significantly to our society.”

National Uniform Day aims to recognize the critical roles these professionals play in our communities. Notable industry associations, such as the Textile Rental Service Association (TRSA) and the Uniform Retailers Association (URA), have already pledged their support for the event. TRSA represents companies enhancing businesses and public environments through linen, uniform, and facility services, making significant contributions to a cleaner and safer community. URA supports uniform retailers and distributors, providing them with the resources to succeed in the uniform industry.
