Nashville employers are invited to this sneak peek of the documentary before it hits major streaming platforms later in 2024. "This is perfect timing for employers as they head into their health insurance renewal season," says Chelsea Ryckis. "This documentary will arm them with insider information that will allow them to ask better questions and demand better results from their brokers and carriers so they can offer higher quality healthcare at the most affordable price to their employees."

The event will feature a 25-minute screening of "It's Not Personal, It's Just Healthcare," followed by a panel discussion. This powerful documentary pulls back the curtain on the challenges faced by both workers and employers in the current healthcare system. Attendees will be moved, outraged, and inspired to demand change in their healthcare programs.

"From workers battling for access to basic care to employers facing unsustainable premium increases year after year, this documentary highlights why this is happening and how employers can stop it," adds Donovan Ryckis. "Spoiler alert: better healthcare at a much lower price is easily attainable, and this documentary provides employers with a clear pathway."
