Analytica Global

New York, USA, Aug. 14, 2024 (EIN NEWSWIRE) --The Global Lamination Film Market value was UDS 9.6 Billion in 2024, it is Expected to Hit USD 14.4 billion by 2032 with CAGR of 5.4%.

An important segment of the packaging and printing industry is that of the lamination film market. The Lamination Film Market grows at a strong base due to several factors. The films, being a protective layer on the surface, can be used in wide fields such as food and beverages, pharmaceuticals, and cosmetics. In addition, with an increasing disposable income and e-commerce trends, the demand for the same is also growing.

Further, advances in technology lead to increased demand for films that support further enhancement of print quality and durability. The green trend, which emphasizes using green products because of the concerns for the environment, drives innovation in sustainable laminate materials. Expanding applications from traditional industries like automotive and construction sectors further expand the market area. Continued high pursuit by the industry toward high quality, attractiveness, and durability in packaging will continue to boot the growth of the Lamination Film Market with promising opportunities for innovation and development.

- Pharmaceuticals and Nutraceuticals
- Cosmetics and Personal Care
- Food and Beverages
- Electronics
- Chemicals
- Others

By Material Type

- Polyethylene Terephthalate
- Biaxial-Oriented Polypropylene
- Biaxial-Oriented Polyethylene Terephthalate,
- Polypropylene,
- Nylon,
- Polyester
- Others

Recent development: -

- May 22, 2024 – Toray Industries, Inc., announced today that it recently commercialized a mold release film for advanced semiconductor applications that is free of per- and polyfluoroalkyl substances (PFAS; see Glossary note 1). The film's material does not contain the organic fluorine compounds that European and other countries are looking to regulate. The film could help improve operational rates in advanced semiconductor manufacturing by slashing problematic mold contamination by more than 80%.
- May 15, 2024 – Toray Industries, Inc., Dow Inc, Comexi Group Industries, S.A.U., Sakata Inx Corporation and SGK Japan (Schawk Japan K.K.) announce today that they have jointly developed a surface printing mono-material film packaging material technology.
