So, you want to be in entertainment, but you don't know anything about the industry or how to make a living in it. Well, let's start by informing you that you probably won't, make a living at it! In fact...

You see, there are no such classes in college explaining to you the true realities of making a living in entertainment. There are plenty of classes about studying, dissecting, or honing your craft. There are numerous classes to help you diversify your entertainment skills. But there are no classes to prepare you for how desperately you will struggle financially if you select this path in life. Sorry to break it to you, but if you choose entertainment as a lifetime profession, the odds are you will be a struggling working-class entertainer your whole life, and that's if you are lucky. But you will probably not be a big Hollywood Star.

It took years of occupational torment for me to figure out that I wanted to be an entertainer. I was always uncomfortable functioning within the "norms" of society, being out of place, uneasy and not really fitting in. I was not happy, I was different. I knew I had to forge my own path. In my heart, I felt like I was going in the wrong direction.

Then one day, I would have to make the biggest decision of my young life. A decision that would change the trajectory of my life forever. It was a true fork in the road. But the consequences of that decision would cause me years of torment and searching, hitting rock bottom, before I would find my true calling in life. This is a journey of discovery. Along the way, I would get a liberal arts entertainment education and create a lifetime of unbelievable entertainment adventures.

This is my epic, entertainment journey. There is no one else in the world that can tell this tale. This is the story of a small-town All-American boy, who went from homeless to Hollywood, entertaining millions on stage for more than four decades. There will be many disappointments and lots of failures, as you will see. But one thing is for sure, the events in my life journey were all part of a wild and crazy one-of-a-kind adventure, that made for such a fulfilling life!
