Case Study: Bird Problems in Adelaide's Storage Units

Our goal is to manage birds without harm while meeting our clients' needs. We prioritise ethical solutions that respect wildlife"

A large storage facility in Adelaide was confronted with a significant bird infestation problem. Birds were gaining entry through open doors and gaps, posing a threat to the facility's cleanliness and reputation. This issue required swift and effective action to safeguard the premises and maintain its standing as a reliable storage provider.

Tom's Pest Control was called upon to tackle the problem head-on. Upon arrival, their team discovered that birds had started nesting both inside and outside the facility, exploiting the open spaces available to them. This situation presented a clear challenge: the need to remove the birds and ensure they wouldn't return.

The experts at Tom's Pest Control conducted a thorough inspection to pinpoint the main access points and nesting areas. They quickly identified the critical spots that needed attention to prevent further bird entry. By addressing these problem areas, they implemented strategies that effectively blocked the birds' access, deterring them from re-entering the facility.

This proactive approach not only resolved the immediate bird infestation but also protected the facility's reputation. By ensuring a bird-free environment, Tom's Pest Control helped maintain the facility's appeal to customers, reinforcing its status as a clean and secure storage option in Adelaide.

Comprehensive Bird Management Strategy

Tom's Pest Control employs humane methods to address bird issues, ensuring that all actions are in line with ethical standards. The team uses techniques such as trapping and scare tactics to manage birds effectively without harming them. Stefan Barker, a spokesperson for Tom's Pest Control, emphasises their approach, saying, "Our goal is to manage birds without harm while meeting our clients' needs. We prioritise ethical solutions that respect wildlife."

After successfully removing the birds from the facility, the focus shifted to preventive measures to ensure they would not return. The team installed bird spikes and other deterrents, making the facility less appealing for nesting. These measures help to block entry points and nesting sites, discouraging birds from coming back.

In addition, Tom's Pest Control collaborated closely with the facility's management, advising them on essential practices to maintain a bird-free environment. This includes keeping doors closed when not in use and routinely checking for potential new access points. This partnership not only reinforces the preventive measures but also empowers the facility staff with the knowledge to manage any minor issues before they escalate. By integrating humane methods and preventive strategies, Tom's Pest Control effectively safeguards the facility, ensuring a clean and safe space.
