Definition:
Workflow orchestration is the process of automating and managing the steps and procedures that make up a complicated workflow. It entails coordinating a few tasks, programs, and systems to ensure they function as a cohesive unit to achieve specific outcomes. Orchestration makes operations more efficient, reduces human error, and streamlines processes by defining, scheduling, and automating workflows. For instance, by combining systems for inventory management, pricing processing, and shipping, workflow orchestration may be able to automate the process of handling customer orders in a business setting. This guarantees that all steps are completed in the correct order and that dependencies are efficiently managed. Additionally, workflow orchestration increases productivity by enabling continuous and environmentally friendly completion of repeated tasks, enabling teams to be aware of
