Meet Olha Lishchyshyn, a singer with a heart full of music from a small town in Western Ukraine. Since she was little, Olha loved to sing, and she's been sharing her songs in many places like Ukraine, Poland, Turkey and the Czech Republic. She even started a band called "Fayni Druzi" (Good Friends) with her pals during her student days. They sang at weddings, parties and other events all around Ukraine and even in other countries.

However, life took a tough turn when the war stopped their singing events. Olha didn't give up, though; she brought her singing to the internet, and through her online performances, she's still bringing smiles and comfort to people, proving that music can go beyond borders and hard times. Most of the funds she earns go towards volunteering to help people affected by the war and to support soldiers defending their country.
