Definition:

Retirement Insurance refers to a category of insurance products that provide income or benefits to individuals during their retirement. These can include annuities, pension plans, and other retirement-focused financial instruments that ensure a stable income stream after retirement.

Market Trends:

- Shift Towards Defined Contribution Plans: There is a growing trend of shifting from defined benefit plans (traditional pensions) to defined contribution plans, where the retirement benefits depend on the investment performance.

Market Drivers:

- Increased Life Expectancy: As people live longer, the need for reliable retirement income increases, driving demand for retirement insurance products.

Market Opportunities:

- Growing Aging Population: The global aging population presents a significant opportunity for retirement insurance providers, as more individuals seek secure income streams for their retirement years.

Market Challenges:

- Low-Interest Rate Environment: The prolonged low-interest-rate environment can reduce the returns on retirement insurance products, making them less attractive to consumers.

Market Restraints:

- High Fees and Charges: The costs associated with retirement insurance products, including fees and commissions, can be high, reducing the net returns for policyholders.
