“Logan is an incredible songwriter and producer who has already achieved tremendous success both on his own and as a member of BeXar,” said Randall Foster, Chief Creative Officer of Symphonic. “I’ve always been impressed by his work and couldn’t be happier that he decided to join the Symphonic family. With our help, there’s no telling how far he’ll go!”

“I’ve been a fan of Logan, ever since I was writing songs with him years ago,” said Eric Olson, Creative Director Publishing at Symphonic. “As both a top liner and a producer, he can step into any role in a writer room, and effortlessly crafts songs across genres that are not only interesting and emotional, but also commercial. Working with a songwriter like this is a luxury, and I’m incredibly excited to get to partner with him on a daily basis.”

“I feel super excited and blessed to be taking this next step of my career with Symphonic,” said Logan Turner. “Eric was one of my first co-writers when I first got to Nashville, and he has always been someone I’ve looked up to and respected both as a producer and as a person. He, Randall, and Melissa [Barber] have already made this place feel like home. I am looking forward to helping them build something special.”

Turner is a songwriter and producer from Bowling Green, KY. After an injury derailed his dreams of playing college basketball, Turner taught himself guitar during his recovery. While writing songs throughout college, he decided to forgo law school, take the leap, and move to Nashville.

Ten months after arriving, he signed his first publishing deal with Keith Urban, Ross Copperman, and Joe Fisher. Shortly after, he was introduced to his future bandmate, and the two signed a record deal under the name BeXar with Warner Music Nashville. After four years and the birth of his first daughter, Turner decided to step away from the band to fully focus on songwriting and production once again.

As an artist, Turner amassed over 50 million streams during his time with BeXar and toured with artists like Keith Urban, Jelly Roll, and Nikko Moon. As a songwriter, Turner has collaborated with Russell Dickerson, Cheat Codes, Keith Urban, Kane Brown, Martin Garrix, Dasha, Diplo, and Jelly Roll, among others.
